Agriculture forms a key component of the county's economy. There are over 10,000 acres of orchards, including grapes, pears, and other fruits.

Wine in particular is a valuable commodity, and is good for tourism.

In addition to grapes, pears and various types of grasses are the most common agricultural crops in the county.

Since the county is so topographically varied, the Rogue Valley is the best place for these crops to grow.

There are two prevalent wine appellations:

Rogue Valley, near southern Medford and Jacksonville.

Applegate Valley, near the community of Applegate.

This is due to the relatively mild climate which is perfect for wine production.
